

GEN. HAWLEY FOR SENATOR.

CHAPTER OF POLITICAL HISTORY
THAT HIS CANDIDACY RECALLS.

Defeated in 1875 by the Ferry bill that had been passed by the Legislature, the General Assembly, the result of a contest against the General Assembly—how the Democrats lost the advantage they gained.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 1.—The coming election of Gen. Joseph H. Hawley as one of the Senators from Connecticut leads attention to a chapter of political history never before fully told, although the transaction it relates attracted wide attention, provoked much comment in the press, and largely influenced the political fortunes of several prominent citizens of Connecticut. But for it neither W. E. Eaton nor Wm. R. Barnum could have been chosen to the United States Senate, and Gen. Hawley, instead of being at last on the eve of attaining the gratification of his long-cherished ambition, would have been a veteran Senator, serving his second term, and looking forward to a third.

The State election of 1875 found the Democrats in Connecticut in a minority. The General Assembly had ordered a recount of the vote in three districts, the result being that Marshall Jewell was declared elected Governor by a small majority. This unexpected proceeding, the legality of which was questioned by the Democratic minority of the Legislature, threatened the result, though in the following year the railroads and public schools were headed by Richard D. Hubbard, in the field, the Republicans carried the State, electing at the same time a majority of the General Assembly. Upon this body devolved the duty of electing a Senator, the term of Orris S. Ferry expired in 1875. Senator Ferry, whose election in 1870 had been the cause of some division in the Republican party, was in very delicate health—in fact, a confirmed invalid, suffering from the same form of spinal disease that proved fatal to Senator Morton. Elected as an uncompromising Radical, the candidate of a section of the party which was to disavow Senator Ferry as being too conservative, he had, as Mr. Foster's successor, pursued very much such a policy as that able statesman would have done had he been re-elected, and in 1875 was regarded as one of the most conservative of Republican Senators. He had advocated a liberal course of amnesty for the ex-rebels of the South; he had opposed in an eloquent speech Mr. Sumner's Civil Rights bill, and it was known by his friends that he was not in sympathy with the radical reconstruction policy.

On the campaign of 1875 but little was said about the Senatorship. Mr. Ferry made a few speeches in the State, and though compelled to support himself by leaning upon a cane, he had never spoken with more force and power. But when the result of the polls had been ascertained, Gen. Hawley was announced as a candidate, and the General Assembly convened it became evident that the Republican members were Hawley men by a large majority. At this time of it seems probable that in being Hawley men they faithfully represented their constituents. Had the question of the Senatorship been left to the vote of the Republican party, Gen. Hawley would have been elected by an overwhelming majority. He was more popular, better known, and more in sympathy with the radical wing of the party. Although he had always been the usage of the Republican party in Connecticut to give a Senatorial and a seat in Congress to a member of the party, it was hardly thought possible that Mr. Ferry could be defeated at a second election. His friends had abandoned all hope of it, and by agreement the Republicans had agreed to support the election of Gen. Hawley as a candidate, and the Democrats had agreed to support the election of Gen. Hawley as a candidate. The publication of this protest made a great sensation. The names attached to it had weight, and the document was widely distributed. A venerable scholar of Yale, elected very favorable comment from the press.

The Republican party now had a large majority in the Senate, and the eight members who had signed the protest were present. Mr. Ferry had several times in the last year been elected to the Senate, and in 1875 elected Orris S. Ferry to the Senate. Great pressure was brought to bear upon the recusants. They were urged, and threatened, and in some cases, as in the case of Mr. Eaton, they were actually threatened with the loss of their seats. They were urged, and threatened, and in some cases, as in the case of Mr. Eaton, they were actually threatened with the loss of their seats.

THE WOUNDS OF JOHN MCCARTHY.

Policeman Hogan and McCarthy's Conflicting Stories in Regard to Them.

At 9 P. M. New Year's night two young men reported at the Union Market Police Station that a young man had been shot at Georgia and Stanton streets. Capt. Cherry sent an officer to the scene, and the result was that a young man named John McCarthy was found lying on the pavement bleeding from two pistol-shot wounds in the back. Police Officer Hogan was in charge of the man, who it was ascertained, was John McCarthy of 105 Georgia street. He gave no account of the manner in which he received his wounds at the time, for he seemed unable to do so. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he was treated for his wounds. McCarthy's story of the shooting was that he had been walking along Georgia street, and had been shot at by a man named John McCarthy. McCarthy's story was that he had been walking along Georgia street, and had been shot at by a man named John McCarthy.

DANIEL WALLACE'S $30,000.

GIVING THE SATISFIED OF A LIFETIME TO CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

One of the Old School Sort of Family Servants—Love for his Employer Surpassing that for his Family—His Death—His Will—His Legacy to the Catholic Church.

Two Roman Catholic Churches, the Immaculate Conception of Irvington and St. Matthew's of Dobbs Ferry, have recently benefited materially and unexpectedly by the death of Daniel Wallace, a man 79 years of age, who left between them nearly $30,000, the savings of a life from the wages of a laborer. Daniel Wallace's career was in some ways curious. He was born in the County Cavan, Ireland, where his father owned a small farm, and finding that the paternal earnings were not sufficient to support the family, the eldest son, Daniel, came to this country more than fifty years ago. A few years' experience of city life in New York caused him to turn his back on the better field for his labor here, and he had abandoned Ireland. He started on foot from New York, and walking along the Hudson River side, he reached Irvington. Here he applied to Col. James Hamilton, a son of Alexander Hamilton, for employment, and was engaged as a household servant. He remained in that position until he had saved a small sum of money, and then he went to New York, where he was employed as a laborer. He was a man of great industry and economy, and he was able to save a large sum of money. He was a man of great industry and economy, and he was able to save a large sum of money.

The people of Irvington all knew and respected the old Irishman. As he crept upon his old age, he became a confirmed woman hater, made no secret of his contempt for the sex, and lived alone in a bachelor's house. But the story is that Wallace's heart was not so cold as his exterior. When a younger man he was supposed to be a paragon of virtue to one of the two daughters of a Mrs. Reynolds, a widow, in good circumstances, living in Irvington. He was a man of great industry and economy, and he was able to save a large sum of money. He was a man of great industry and economy, and he was able to save a large sum of money.

UNITED ACTION PROPOSED.

Irving Hall's Proposal to Tammany for Organizing the Board of Aldermen.

Five of the six Irving Hall Aldermen elected—Messrs. Strick, Power, Barnard, Kenny, Carver and Campbell—met yesterday afternoon for consultation on the subject of organizing a Democratic organization for the Board of Aldermen. This is a specially important at the present time from the fact that the President of the Board of Aldermen is ex-officio a member of the Board of Aldermen. At present the Board of Aldermen is composed of five Democrats and one Republican. The Board would like to see the number of Democrats increased to six, and the number of Republicans reduced to one. The Board would like to see the number of Democrats increased to six, and the number of Republicans reduced to one.

IN AND OUT OF WALL STREET.

AN OLD LANDMARK BURNED.

The year which has just ended will always be remembered as one of the most remarkable in the financial history of the United States. The prosperity that began with the return to specie payments and the consequent improvement in our credit abroad has continued during the year, and has in many instances greatly increased. Particulars have been found in stocks and bonds, and would under ordinary circumstances have been deemed the wildest sort of speculation has been rife on the Stock Exchange. The increase in prices seems almost fabulous; yet in most cases it has been fully justified by the magnificent business that the railroads have been doing. The general situation in England and the want of room for investments in that country have driven large sums of idle capital to our markets, and the plethora of capital that undoubtedly exists here, in spite of the temporary tightness of loanable money, has caused a demand for new enterprises. The tendency in all civilized countries is toward the investment of capital, and the time must come when idle money capitalists will have to embark their labor as well as their capital in their ventures. When a man with $10,000 a year suddenly finds that he is reduced to $9,000 a year, while there is no similar reduction in the cost of living, he will seek means to make up the difference. Either he must seek some business where by adding the product of his own labor to his investment he may make the missing $1,000, or he must enter into schemes of a gambling nature, but promising a high rate of interest.
